

I oppose imposing 'field reparable' requirements on amateur radio equipment manufacturers. I feel that such impositions are beyond the proper realm of the FCC. ANYTHING is 'field repairable' if you have the right tools in the 'field'; adding unnecessarily burdensome (and vague) regulations will only stifle the advancement of technology (e.g. miniaturization) and the advancement of the skills of the amateur radio operators themselves.